This workshop on Women's Inclusion in Agriculture is the first workshop in a 3-part series. The aims are to begin to demystify how women are included and excluded within family farms and within the agriculture industry; and, to create meaningful dialogue to productively challenge and change inequities and misrepresentations. There will be time to share insights and to develop personal and professional understandings of how women in Western Canada participate in, and respond to, the systemic challenges of land inheritance practices and misrepresentations.

Diane comes from a rural background as a farmer in southern Alberta. Her MA research focus was on the cultural, social, and political components of gender equity in agriculture. In this workshop, she shares some of the research findings specific to land inheritance practices and gendered representations of family farms.

1 p.m. to 3 p.m. | registration required | Woodhaven Board Room, Kelowna, BC
